10 YEARS FOR STABBING TO DEATH WIFE'S 'BOY FRIEND'

A MAN who stabbed his wife's "boy friend" to death after waylaying him, was jailed for 10 years by the High Court yesterday on an amended charge of manslaughter.

Out Ek Guan, 27, originally accused of murder, pleaded guilty to the amended charge of culpable homicide by causing the death of Sunny Chia Teck Chye, 28, in Geylang on the night of May 30 last year. Chia was described as the "boy friend" of Out's wife, bar waitress Eu Say Mei.

Out and Eu were originally from Malaysia and had been here since 1973.

Traded

DPP Mr. Alan Wong said that Out, a shop assistant, had in February last year dropped strongly of Eu's relationship with Chia. On the night of May 29 Out traded them to a Geylang outburst.

As Eu and Chia left the shop, Out grabbed Chia by the collar and later stabbed Chia several times. Eu, Mr. Wong said, attempted to stop the stabbing, but she raised an alarm.

Mr. S. K. Lee, for Out, said his client was "emotionally upset" in the incident.

Jail, rotan for dope pedlar

A SELF-CONFESSED drug addict, Long Hin Quok, 28, was sentenced to four years jail and four strokes of the cane on Saturday for drug trafficking.

The Third District Court found him guilty of committing the offence in a hock-lane of Kitchener Road around 1.30 p.m. on Nov. 11 last year.

Woman cut sister-in-law's body after fatal fight

A MOTHER of six, who killed her sister-in-law and chopped up her body, was jailed for 10 years by Mr. Justice Cheop Singh in the High Court yesterday.

Sim Joo Kwee, 44, of Upper Perak Road, admitted that she hid the dismembered parts of the body of her sister-in-law, Quok Lee Eok, 53, partly in her (Sim's) house and partly in various places in the bathroom on the first floor.

Those parts remaining in the house were kept in two jars—one placed at the airwell and the other in the bathroom on the first floor.

The head and the arms were found in a package, recovered from a car in Kallang, and both the legs in a toilet near the Loring Street Mosque, off Aljunied Road.

Statement

Married for 28 years, Sim was pre-occupied then with how best to dispose of the body and not getting her husband and children involved, however innocently and remotely, in any way.

Gruesome

These gruesome details of the case were told to a packed court by DPP Mr. Alan Wong. He said after Sim pleaded guilty to a charge of manslaughter and another of causing "evidence to disappear" with the instruction of "screening her off from punishment."

The judge jailed Sim for 10 years on the manslaughter offence and three years on the second charge.

Panic

The two offences were committed on May 8 last year when Quok went to Sim's house to collect some money from Sim, said the DPP.

Mr. S. K. Lee, for Sim, opened his mitigation plea by stating that Quok was already dead when Sim dismembered her body.

Counsel said: "This fact is important as the public seems to think, perhaps from rumours, that the accused had chopped up the deceased while the latter was still alive."

He referred the court to the report of the government pathologist, Dr. Chao Tze Cheng, who stated that Quok's and Quok as relatives were on the best of terms.

After her arrest, Sim surrendered a chopper she used in the incident and made a cautioned statement to the police.

The DPP said after Quok had "failed" to get home from Sim's house, Sim brushed off inquiries from Quok's family that Quok had in fact called on her.

Even to the police, Sim originally maintained she had nothing to do with Quok's disappearance.

It was only two days later after police — on information received — recovered a pair of human legs in a toilet near a village mosque and followed this up with other "evidence" that Sim made a voluntary statement to Inspector Teo.

The statement contained her version of how she strangled Quok and how she disposed of Quok's dead, said Mr. Wong.

10 years' jail for mother of six death was consistent with strangulation.

The dismemberment, Mr. Lee pleaded, arose from Sim being "panic-stricken" on discovering that Quok had died in the course of a violent struggle with her.
