

How is a "three parent" baby formed?

Genetic material from three people – two women and a man – can be combined to help couples who would otherwise be unable to have healthy children of their own. This is known as mitochondrial genome replacement technology. One example of the three existing methods to do so is shown here.

