

The Olympics In Numbers

The Tokyo Games, which will bring the world's top athletes together, is a mammoth project made even more complicated by the pandemic. Here are some key figures to note:

>11,000

Sportsmen and women from

205

countries and regions

US$15.4b

The final budget for the postponed Games. The one-year delay caused expenses to balloon by US$2.8 billion, which covers costs from staff retention to new infection prevention measures.

200kg

Weight each cardboard bed at the Olympic Village can take.

33

SPORTS

with four – karate, skateboarding, surfing and sport climbing – appearing for the first time.

20,000

Virus tests a day. Athletes will be tested every day for the coronavirus, with confirmed positive cases not allowed to compete and placed in hotel isolation or hospital.

7

GOLDS

American swimmer Caeleb Dressel could bag in Tokyo.

18,000

Beds made by Japanese bedding company Airweave for athletes at the Olympic Village, 8,000 of which will be repurposed for next month's Paralympics.

99%

of items and goods procured for the Games can be expected to be reused or recycled. These include some 65,000 computers, tablets and other IT and consumer appliances, as well as 19,000 office desks, chairs and other fixtures, which will be used and then passed on.

6.21 million

Old phones donated by the Japanese public. The 5,000 gold, silver and bronze medals at the Tokyo Games are made entirely from recycled metal – extracted from nearly 79,000 tons of used consumer electronics including laptops, games consoles and digital cameras.

40,000

Pieces of timber, donated by 63 Japanese municipal governments, used in the building of the Olympic Village Plaza. Each piece is marked with the area that supplied the wood. When the Games end, they will be used elsewhere.

48,000

Meals expected to be served at the Olympic Village each day.

700

Menu options for diners at the Olympic Village. The cuisine is classified as Western, Japanese and Asian, which covers Chinese, Indian and Vietnamese options.

$621,000

Starting price of a condominium unit at the Olympic Village. After the Games, the condominiums, located in Tokyo's Harumi area, will be converted into ordinary apartment buildings.

160,000

Condoms given out by organisers to athletes, who are supposed to bring them back to their own countries to support awareness about HIV/AIDS.
